

STEM*FYI x QB3

Discovering Career Self-Advocacy: How to make the most of grad school for your future using IDPs

Hosted by Rosanne Lurie, Director of QB3

The Office for Graduate Diversity invites graduate STEM scholars to join STEM*FYI for an interactive professional development workshop with QB3-Berkeley Graduate and Postdoc Career Development director, Rosanne Lurie. You won't want to miss this free, fun, and enriching opportunity!

Whether you are in the early stages of your PhD program and still adjusting to grad life at Berkeley, or farther along and thinking about post-grad life, join us to learn about tangible career planning steps you can take to bridge the gap between your current and future self.

We will introduce you to the Individual Development Plan (IDP), an easy-to-use planning instrument that helps students thoughtfully design and track professional development goals and learning objectives. You'll receive resources and suggestions, and through breakout activities have opportunities to identify key skills, establish goals, and communicate effectively to set yourself up for success.

There will also be 4 $25 raffle winners!

RSVP at tinyurl.com/QB3workshop

MAY 6, 2021
4pm-5:30pm

QB3

MADE POSSIBLE BY THE PPG FOUNDATION

